1. Purpose

This disclosure explains HOZON’s practical electronic-signing feature. It is intended to make document workflows easier, not to represent that every HOZON signature is a qualified or certified digital signature under every law.

2. Before You Sign

- You should review the complete document or documents presented to you.
- HOZON may show the number of documents, pages, and signature positions included in the request.
- If you do not understand or agree with the document, do not sign it.
- Contact the sender directly if you need changes, clarification, or a different signing method.

3. What Your Confirmation Means

When you draw/apply a signature and press the final confirmation control, you indicate that you intentionally applied that signature or mark to the specified document and signature positions. HOZON may record limited workflow information such as the request identifier, signer-entered name, contact detail supplied by the sender, date/time, device/browser information, and completion status.

4. One Signature, Multiple Positions

Where the sender has assigned several signature positions to the same signer, HOZON may allow the signer to draw once and apply the same confirmed signature image to all assigned positions. The signer is shown the scope of the request before confirming.

5. No Identity Certification

HOZON does not automatically verify a signer’s legal identity merely because a link was opened or a signature was drawn. Unless a separate verified identity service is expressly provided, the visible signature and workflow record should not be treated as a government-certified identity check.

6. Legal Effect

Electronic-signature laws differ by country and transaction type. Certain documents or regulated transactions may require stronger identity verification, a qualified electronic signature, a licensed trust service, witnesses, notarization, or another formal process. Users are responsible for confirming that HOZON's signing method is appropriate for their specific transaction.

7. Document Integrity

For signing workflows, HOZON may create a fixed PDF representation and apply the signature to that version. The final signed copy is separate from the user's original source file. HOZON does not provide a full PDF editor or preserve every interactive PDF feature in every signing workflow.

8. Temporary Availability

Signed results shared through HOZON links may be available only for a limited period. Senders and signers should download any copy they wish to retain. HOZON is not intended to be the permanent archive for externally signed files.

9. Responsibility

The sender is responsible for the document they request another person to sign. The signer is responsible for deciding whether to sign. HOZON does not provide legal advice or determine whether the document is fair, complete, lawful, or enforceable.

10. Operator and Contact
